

IN FURI YOU WILL:

- Create several remixes and mashups that are critical or satirical works of art focusing on political, social, and cultural issues, from a youth perspective
- Learn to use both on-line and offline editing and remix tools such as Kaltura, Adobe Premiere, and Final Cut Pro.
- Learn how to download or appropriate media from television and the web, including the Creative Commons and Remix America
- Work with various styles of remix including music video, movie trailer, short film, tv commercial, news and artistic
- Learn how to "quote copyrighted material" as Fair Use in order to reclaim First Amendment and Free Speech rights
- Learn how to advocate for flexible and fair copyright laws, network neutrality and other public policies that impact your cultural rights
- Meet, converse and collaborate with a diverse group of socially-active youth from all over Chicago
- Reach and impact large audiences through conferences, web distributions and speaking tours.

MEET YOUR FURI Facilitators

Jonathan McIntosh

Jonathan McIntosh is a digital media artist, photographer, and activist working in Boston and New York City. His digital video work focuses primarily on transforming corporate media images by remixing them to tell alternative political and cultural narratives. His Political Remix Video work has appeared in independent film festivals, on community TV programs and at new media conferences. Jonathan currently teaches art and technology courses at the School of the Museum of Fine Arts Boston. You can find his political remix videos and photography work on his website www.rebelliouspixels.com

Patricia Aufderheide

Patricia Aufderheide, PhD is a professor in the School of Communication at American University in Washington, D.C., and the director of the Center for Social Media. She is the author of Recut, Reframe, Recycle: Quoting Copyrighted Material in User-Generated Video, a report that shows that many uses of copyrighted material in today's online videos are eligible for fair use consideration.

Mindy Faber

The Founding Director of Open Youth Networks is Mindy is an award-winning independent video producer, curator and educator. She is a co-recipient (with Youth for Social Action) of the George W. Foster Peabody Award in 2007 and is the 1996 recipient of the Rockefeller Intercultural Media Fellowship.

About Chicago Filmmakers and Open Youth Networks

Chicago Filmmakers is a 33 year-old media arts organization that fosters the creation, appreciation and understanding of film and video as media for artistic and personal expression, as well as media of important social and community impact. The space is equipped with cameras, green screens, a theatre, a classroom and computer lab with state of the art software housed on new iMacs.

Open Youth Networks at Chicago Filmmakers assists young people and their allies in the design and use of digital media tools that enable them to create innovative peer-to-peer projects of dialogue, art, education and action.